Brochure Training Overview
Types of Brochures

Who is your Audience?

1. Direct Mail (Post Box)
2. Point-of-Sale/Check-Out (Over the counter)
3. Leave-Behind (After Sales Pitch)
4. Sales Support Tool (Sales Kit)
5. Respond-to-Inquiries (Answer the Query)
Direct Mail (Post Box) Brochure

- Mailed out to local residences.
- Audience is unsure - content must stand apart from the rest of the mail.
- Design, style, and layout must strongly be considered to attract interest from variety readers.
- Content must contain a clear introduction, purpose, highlight main points, and how the topic/product is preferred from others.
- The brochure will present the sales pitch.
Point-of-Sale/Check-Out Brochures

• Speaks for itself. No prior knowledge is required to understand the content of the brochure.
• Catchy headlines and graphics attract people to view the brochure while waiting in line at the grocery store.
• The brochure will provide general information about the topic and spark interest. The “shopper” will then inquire more by looking up a website, emailing the company, or calling the company phone number.
• These types of brochures may be relevant to the location it is displayed. For example, brochures found in a grocery store will probably have content related to food, nutrition, or health.
Leave-Behind Brochures

• Used as a support document after meeting a client or giving a presentation.
• Summarize main points of the meeting and provide resources to research the topic further.
• Prior knowledge of the content may be required to understand the brochure purpose.
Sales Support Tool Brochure

• During a presentation or sales pitch, this brochure type would act as a visual media support tool. It will be part of the presentation to enhance main points.

• The audience will have a common purpose on attending the presentation and listening to the content.

• The brochure should contain information from the presentation, graphics, and clever titles to help the audience retain the information and keep interest after the presentation is over.
Respond-to-Inquiries Brochures

• This brochure seals the deal. The client already has interest in your topic/product and would like to know the next step.

• A good example would be a brochure explaining the steps of opening an IRA account. The brochure would list the steps, list statistics, facts, and important information the client must know to be convinced they are making the right choice.

• The brochure would emphasize content over design.
Common Layouts

• Flyer: An 8.5 x 11 sheet of paper. Content is usually on one size of the sheet.

• Bi-fold: An 8.5 x 11 or 11 x 17 sheet of paper folded in two equal parts. Content is visible on the front and back.

• Trifold: An 8.5 x 11 sheet of paper folded in three equal parts (each section is about 3.66 inches). Content is visible on the front and back.

• Z-Fold: An 8.5 x 11 sheet of paper folded in three equal parts in a “Z” pattern (each section is about 3.66 inches). Content is visible on the front and back.
Examples
